THE ENCAMPMENT

A Business Meeting Held Yesterday and Officers for the Year Selected.

The Banquet Last Night a Gathering of Wits and Eloquent Speakers in Plenty.

Powerful Addresses Made by Major Ma ginnis Colonel Sanders and Other Grand Army Men.

At 12 o'clock noon yesterday delegates from the eighteen Montana posts of the Grand Army of the Republic met for their fifth annual encampment in the quarters of Wadsworth post at the court house. Department Commander Junius G. Sanders in the chair. After roll call, prayer and other preliminary business committee were appointed and a recess taken until 2 p. m. Upon reassembling the delegates appended their names to the roster and the reports of officers were received. In his report Department Commander Junius G. Sanders recited briefly the ac-complishments of the Grand Army twenty four years ago, when citizen and soldier alike watched with more anxious and more hopeful eyes for the white-winged messenger of peace. An event such as the civil war has never occurred since the surrender of the armies of Great Britain to the surrender of the armies of Great Britain to the surrender of the armies of Great Britain to the surrender of the armies of Great Britain to the surrender of the armies of Great Britain to the surrender of the armies of Great Britain to the surrender of the armies of Great Britain to the surrender of the armies of Great Britain to the surrender of the armies of Great Britain to the surrender of the armies of Great Britain to the surrender of the armies of Great Britain to the surrender of the armies of Great Britain to the surrender of the armies of Great Britain to the surrender of the armies of Great Britain to the surrender of the armies of Great Britain to the surrender of the armies of Great Britain to the surrender of the armies of Great Britain to the surrender of the armies of Great Britain to the surrender of the armies of Great Britain to the surrender of the armies of Great Britain to the surrender of the armies of Great Britain to the surrender of the armies of Great Britain to the surrender of the armies of Great Britain to the surrender of the armies of Great Britain to the surrender of the armies of Great Britain to the surrender of the surr General Washington at Yorktown. He noted the progress of the nation since the close of the war, and speaking of the northwest region said: "This great region, constituting one-half of the geographical area of the country, almost untra-versed and unknown at that time, has de-veloped mineral wealth, such as no other veloped mineral wealth, such as no other country possessed, hidden in the bowels of the earth and patriots wonderingly inquiring whence should come the precious metals wherewith the credit of the union was to be redeemed. How little did they appreciate the energy that remained after the great struggle, the enterprise that was directed into new paths of conquest, and the resources that lay buried in the traditional and seeming waste, west of the mighty Missourityer. Over all this broad domain now exriver. Over all this broad domain now ex-ist cities that are the marvel of the country, and state after state arises to demand recog-nition in this American union. We have Over all this broad domain now ex witnessed a great transformation. From New Mexico to Montana the soldiers of the war have engaged in this conquest of peace and prosperity in this western world." He then spoke of the encampment at Columbus and asked all to make this last encampment in the territory of Montana one of abundant in the territory of Montana one of abundant gratification and rejoicing.

He alluded to the report of the assistant adjutant general which shows a membership gain of sixty-one against twenty-three for the previous year. New posts organized during the year were two, Thomas Francis Meagher post, No. 17 and White Sulphur Springs post No. 18, at Great Falls. He also spoke of the Sons of Veterans, which in the new division embraces Montana, Idaho, Washington and Oregon. In this department are five organegon. In this department are five organ-ized camps with 200 membership. In speaking of the Grand Army vs. politics he said: "At no time since its organization has the Grand Army of the Republic had has the Grand Army of the Republic had an opportunity to demonstrate - so clearly to the world, its non-partisan principles as in the last national campaign," and alluded to the question it involved of maintaining in office the man who promulgated the "Flag Order." In conclusion he said he should ever feel grateful for the honor conferred upon him, and hope that all should rend to his successor that loyalty which characterized their action to him in the year past.

John Moffit, assistant adjutant-general, John Momt, assistant adjutant-general, submitted his report, which showed a mem-bership of the Grand Army of the Republic in Montana of 785. There were seven deaths during the year, and the net gain was sixty-one members. The financial exhibit showed Delegates to the National Encampment A resolution was adopted favoring a ser-vice pension law. A committee was ap-pointed, consisting of W. F. Sanders, Geo. W. Shaw, E. A. Kreidler, P. R. Dolman and H. A. Swann, to devise a department badge to be worn at the national encampment. The meeting then adjourned to the Pittsburg block for the banquet.

A happier or a joilier crowd was never assembled together in one place all of one accord than the G. A. R. boys at the banquet which was spread in the Pittsburg There was an abundance of th good things requisite for a sumptuous re-past on hand, Jack Scarff having prepared the feast. Besides the choicest viands the rarest wines flowed. Punches bracing and exhilirating were in abundance and attentive waiters saw no glass was kept stand-ing empty. It was essentially a stag gath-ering and freedom reigned victorious over ail.

Hon. T. P. Fuller presided as toast master and kept the boys well in hand. Songs were interspersed between the toasts and the old songs familiar to all who have tented on the old camp ground were sung with a vigor scarcely expected of thosemany of whom the sands of life are running fast.

many of whom the sands of life are running fast.

"The President of the United States," was responded to by Judge J. G. Galbraith, who made an excellent speech of its kind, but which like its kind was full of fire and threatening against the democratic party and especially against the democratic party of Montana, which the judge imagines is composed exclusively of the left wing of Price's army. He was vociferous. wing of Price's army. He was vociferous, rehement and vindictive. At the conclusion of the judge's address T

At the conclusion of the judge's address T. H. Kleinschmidt proposed three cheers for the president of the United States, which was given with a will and a tiger followed.

"The Star Spangled Banner" was sung. Toastmaster Fuller announced the next toast was "Our Country." He said the gentleman who would respond was one who would receive the hearty support of all for commander—James E. Callaway. Mr. Callaway mounted a chair. He said he was a rather small man and coming after Judge Galbraith reminded him of Clay and Prentiss at New Orleans. He said that three weeks from now that three weeks from recountry would witness rounding of this century, full rounding of this century, the centennial anniversary of the inauguration of George Washington as president of the United States. The first problem presented to the revolutionary fathers was whether they could establish a government and protect it against foreign foes. They demonstrated that they could. Another came along in which you boys had something to say. Jefferson, when he came to die, said afterward and trembled for his country but he feared and trembled for his country but he feared and trembled for his country, but remembered God is just. He referred to slavery. He knew the day of retribution would come, and it did come, when the chackles were stricken from the limbs of slaves. The statue of liberty enlightening the world now looked upon a people truly

"Rally 'round the Flag" was sung.
Mr. Fuller said the next speaker would respond to the toast, "The Grand Army of the Republic" and would be responded to by a man whose mental powers were only equalled by his physical proportions, Col.
Geo. O. Eston.

The Col. said he had heard it said that a The Col. said he had heard it said into a toast was a theoretical peg to stick into a theoretical wall upon which to hang theoretical subjects. However, he would endeavor to brave the dangers of the undeavor to brave the dangers of the dangers of the undeavor to brave the dangers of the dangers known sea he was expected to explore. He said he was full. (A voice, bully for you.)
He would endeavor to get it out in order to fill up on something else. Members of the order could well feel proud of their achievements. The absorbing question to be asked was "did you at the supreme" moment, dropping everything else, bear your bosom to the leaden storm that every-thing else might live?" A high tribute was paid to the American soldier, who on was paid to the American solder, who on many battle fields upheld the glory of our country. The speaker hoped that if there should be war in the future it would come from the foe beyond and the foe without, and that the noble remnant of those left would at least form a nucleus for an army of defenders. He closed by quoting a well known poem extolling virtues of our dead known poem extolling virtues of our dead heroes.

"When Johnny Comes Marching Home" was sung with spirit, after which the toast "To the memory of Gen. Phil. Sheridan and our dead heroes" was drunk in silence, standing, and "Tenting To-Night on the Old Camp Ground" was sung.

"Toast Master Fulier said the teast "The Volunteer Soldier" was to be responded to by one he knew in the Second Corps as a man without fear and without reproach—Maj. Maginnis.

The major was greeted with round of applause when he arose. He said he would not attempt to make no speech. Just before he rose Mr. Kinsley suggested to him that in the charge along the stonewall at Gettysburg the men pinned their names upon their breasts so that they could be recognized if they fell in hat they could be recognized if they fell in that they could be recognized if they fell in the charge. He thought the boys assem-bled at the banquet ought to do the same thing. The major said when Judge Gal-braith went for some of the political faith as himself he felt that he belonged to the dead, and if called upon for a speech would have to get up and deliver his own funeral oration. The judge had probably forgotten the recent elections on the east side which demonstrated that the democrats belonged to the quick and not to the dead. But the judge and he were good friends, and all judge and he were good friends, and all were patriotic enough not to detract from the patriotism of each other. They were e and all for their country. one and all for their country.

In a humorous style the major related a story about the time he once made a speech in the east when were present the most illustrious generals of the union army. It so happened that his picture got into an instrated paper, and it was marked "Mar tin Maginnis, the orator of the day." He tin Maginnis, the orator of the day." He brought a number of those papers to Montana and was busily engaged in sending them to his constituents, mailing them from Jeff Lowrey's office. While engaged in so doing he met Larry Welch, who once had a counter claim against the Drum Lummon mine and who Tommy Cruse disposed of by licking him. The conversation that ensued was embellished by the major in his inimitable style and elicited roars of laughter.

The history of the volunteer was told in a graceful mastery style. His leavin home, his enlistment, his marches and fight were traced so graphically that one could see the panorama unrolled to view. The volunteer said Maj. Maginnis went out in the beginning of the war and did not wait until stimulated by an offer of a bounty of $500 and a cow. Some historical facts in which Grant and Sheridan were intimately connected, and which remain a part of unwritten history which remain a part of unwritten history were related greatly to the delight and edification of all his hearers. Reverting to the volunteer the speaker said that he had and would have a name in American history. The ablest man in the United States senate was a voluniteer soldier, as was the ablest preacher to New York city, and in every vocation. unteer soldier, as was the ablest preacher in New York city; and in every vocation in life the volunteer was to the front. Even the presidential chair was filled by a brave, honest, courageous, manly, honorable and worthy volunteer, and the volunteer will insure the perpetuity of this great Amer-ican government. [Loud applause.] The battle hymn of the republic was sung and sung again by the enthusiastic veterans.

Capt. Wyman, of Butte, responded to the toast "Sons of Veterans." The captsinis an eloquent speaker and made a most brilliant effort, closing by saying: "We hope the sons of veterans will ever be ready for duty, but like the old maid never wanted."

"A thousand years my own Columbia," was the next song on the programme, and it was finely rendered.

"The State of Montana" was responded to by Col. W. F. Sanders. Mayor Fuller said the toast would be repiled to by the next senator from the state of Montana, the crested jayhawk of the mountains.

The colonel for some time could not make himself heard on occount of the cheering, which was deafening. He said he was a proxy and did not know who his principal was. When he asked who would be responsible for him a dozen voices answered assuming all responsibility, and the matter was finally settled by one saying the first the county of the capture of the city.

The colonel for some time could not make himself heard on occount of the cheering, which was deafening. He said he was a proxy and did not know who his principal was. When he asked who would the responsibility and the matter was finally settled by one saying the matter was finally settled by one saying the first in the capture of the City Council:

It has been the pleasure of my fellow-citizens of Helena to cail me to perform the duties of the office of mayor for another year, and I am here to take the oath, and to assume the labors and obligations that it implies, in accordance with their wishes. I do this with an increased sense of the responsibility that this ceremony represents, and with a corresponding desire to discharge it justly and to the advantage of the city.

"The executive officer of a city having the population and proportions that Helena possesses is apt to come in contact with various and conflicting personal interests. It is not to be supposed that he can satisfy all individuals or corporations who have relations with the municipal government, the matter was finally settled by one saying the Grand Army of the Republic would. Col. Sanders speech was erudite, teeming with witty passages, and pathetic at times. He said before the war he was in public life, and enumerated the names of the great life, and enumerated the names of the great abolition leaders from whom he imbibed much of the spirit which animated his soul when speaking against the evils of slavery and against which he fought. He said they had come there to affirm that what they had done was right and which they purposed was worthy of a name in the history of ages. The degeneracy of the times before the people became really awakened had been sung by the poet, Whittier, and he himself thought that he had never seen a people so pusillanimous as the American a people so pusilianimous as the American people between the years of 1856 and 1861. The speaker administered a reprimand to Mr. Fuller for bringing politics in his introduction. He spoke of the future pos-sibilities of Montana as a state and gave some touching and just advice to his comsome touching and just advice to his com-rades. Col. Sanders' speech was full of the fire of patriotism and could have been made by no man who was not averse to the petty trickery and shamelessness by which some men advance themselves. He told the truth, but he did it in a manly manner. The contrast between the speech of Col. Sanders and that of Judge Galbraith, both Dr. Holmes made a spirited address, after which the comrades took their de-parture to meet again at 11 o'clock to-day outgoing aldermen for the zeal displayed in the city's welfare during the past year. Adopted.

Mayor Fuller then took the oath of office.

After having been sworn in he delivered his inaugural address, as follows:

relations with the municipal government, and it is equally impossible that in the hasty exercise of his judgment which is often called for, he should always be able to measure out strict justice to each. Hence it is no doubt true that some of the eriticism that has been heard upon the city administration of the past year is proper; but it would be pleasant to have it considered at the same time that the mayor has performed some share of unpaid labor and disagreeable duties that have at least been discharged with a specific desired to be performed. discharged with a sincere desire to benef

"It would be unwise for me to enter upon a second term with new promises or with any elaborate project of new policies. The decision of the people of the city at the recent election was, by an emphatic expression, in favor of completing the sewerage system which has been prosecuted during the past year to the extent of constructing the mains. The proposition which has now been approved at the poils is to construct the lateral sewers by an additional issue of bonds to the amount of $130,000, and it will be your early duty to carry out the wishes of the city in this respect by proper proceedings to sell the bonds and to solicit proposals for the work. In these contracts I trust that special care will be proper proceedings to sen the londs and to solicit proposals for the work. In these contracts I trust that special care will be exercised to see that the employes are pro-tected in the prompt payment of their wages. Those who furnish materials are tected in the prompt payment of their wages. Those who furnish materials are ordinarily able to advise themselves as to the responsibility of the parties with whom they deal. But this is not true of laboring men who appeal peculiarly to the aid of the city in seeing that they are not defrauded of what they have earned.

"There is an unmistakable demand on the part of our citizens, which is not limited by local lines, that Main street shall be paved. I do not hesitate to recommend that this work be carried out, and while there are questions as to where and in what proportions the expense shall be assessed, I can not too strongly urge that our principal thoroughfare shall be so improved that it shall cease to be a shame and reproach to the city, and an inconvenience to the entire public.

"The completion of our sewerage system and the paving of Main street are duties that seem to address themselves to us immediately. There are many other works of public improvement that appeal strongly to the interest and convenience of localities and individuals, but it is equally true that not all of these can be done at once. There is a limit fixed both by the capacity of property owners to pay taxes, and by the good name of the city, which ought of property owners to pay taxes, and by the good name of the city, which ought not to be exceeded, and we may properly ask that some improvements of a local character shall be postponed.

"As to those that are urgently demanded by the growth of the city, it is submitted to your judgment whether the time has not arrived when there may be a division of the cost, a part to be defrayed by the gen-eral fund and a part to be assessed against eral fund and a part to be assessed against the property benefitted, upon petitions of of the owners as required by the charter.

"The methods of our service for the extinguishment of fires are in some degree changed by the abundant supply of water that has been provided, and the alarm apparatus that has been contracted for. I recommend the establishment of a hose station at some point in the fifth ward, near the boundary of the third, that shall be promptly equal to calls from that part of the city. It is possible that some reduction of the central service can be prudently made that will represent the expense thus suggested.

"Our city had its beginning as a mining camp. people have made it a metropolis that is attracting in an unusual degree the attention of the country, and is full of promise of a great future.

"It is my desire within the sphere of my official duties to aid this object, and to keep the operations of the city government apace with the investments of capital in private enterprises. It cannot be done private enterprises. It cannot be done by extravagant expenditures, because a high rate of taxation is always an obstacle to growth, but by a system of just and prop-growth, but by a system of just and properly distributed works, with strict regard to economy and necessity.

"I address you, gentlemen of the council, as chargeable in no less measure than myself with the responsibilities of the municipal government for the year upon which we now enter. With the co-operawhich we now enter. With the co-opera-tion which I am sure that you will extend, we may reasonably hope that we will de-serve the confidence of the people who have delivered this trust into our hands, and perform our part in promoting the fu-ture of the city in which we have a com-mon interest and a common pride."
